COMMUNITY PASSION PROJECT FEATURE RELEASED FREE

600 volunteers spend 137,000 man-hours on Missing Pieces & give it away!

Buzz Productions is proud to announce that its debut feature film Missing Pieces will be released today after nearly five years of work. The production was an elaborate community effort of film-lovers and friends who forfeited payment to contribute to the project.

The novice efforts of mostly untrained crew were supported by veteran actors, Mark Boone Jr. (Batman Begins, 'Sons of Anarchy,' Memento) and Melora Walters (Magnolia, 'Big Love,' Cold Mountain). Both won awards for their performance in the film.

During Walter's acceptance speech, she commented that being part of the film was an award in itself. "The tiny crew created Missing Pieces with seemingly nothing, and it truly shows the magic of cinema and passionate filmmaking," she said.

The production was spearheaded by Alabama writer/director, Kenton Bartlett, who started the project at age 19, filmed it at 21, and is currently 24. He lives in Birmingham and is currently writing future projects.

"I couldn't be more excited about releasing the film this way," Bartlett said. "So many people worked so hard, and we just want to make it easy for people to find, watch, and share."

Bartlett cites the for-free releases of some of his favorite artists as inspiration for this distribution approach. “I really love The Milk Carton Kids, Lord Huron, David Ramirez, and so many other bands who are giving away their music these days. It’s not ideal or completely practical, but it does help spread the art, and that’s our goal.”

According to Missing Pieces Executive Producer Estelle Buzzard, the budget was $100,000, but she estimates it would have been over a million without the in-kind donations of services and supplies.

“This film could not have been made without all these wonderful people donating their time and expertise. Hopefully this is the beginning of the great things for Missing Pieces,” said Buzzard.

Buzz Productions is a division of Buzz Corporate Communications (Buzz). It was established in 2012 to cater exclusively to the company’s increasing number of film clients and projects, which have previously included festival favorites Little Sparrows, More 4 Me, Bitter Art and Crush; award winning documentary producers Prospero Productions; and the prestigious French-Australian film festival, CinefestOZ.

Most recently, the Buzz team returned from Sundance as its film, The Lifeguard (starring Kristen Bell), made waves during the festival. Buzz is currently preparing for the release of The Lifeguard and seeking investors for Bartlett’s next project, Gifted.
